Course Description

This graduate seminar explores the dynamics of neoliberal globalization and its impact on local communities, nation-states, cities, and other spaces and places around the world. It examines the articulation of local-global forces as well as complex patterns of resistance ranging from place-based struggles to transnational social movements. The course begins by considering diverse sociological approaches to development and underdevelopment in the world capitalist system, including modernization, dependency, and world systems theories. We then examine the concepts of racial capitalism and gendered capitalism to provide theoretical grounding for understanding diverse forms of accumulation and resistance within the world system. Next, we turn to Haiti to theorize the long-durée histories of revolution and counter-revolution, followed by readings on new imperialisms of the present-day. We then explore the emergence of neo-liberalism and contemporary finance capital, as well as alternative popular and grassroots movements at local, regional, and transnational scales. This is followed by several classes on the global production, gender, race, and migration in China and across the U.S.-Mexico border, the making of racial capitalism through oil extraction in Africa, and resistance against the prison-boom in California. We conclude with readings on the globalization of the police and the long counter-revolution, alongside emergent urban and transnational social movements. The class combines theoretical analysis of global capitalism, neoliberalism, development, and resistance with the study of concrete struggles in defense of land, labor, human rights, indigenous cultures and identities, and ecological sustainability in Africa, Asia, The Caribbean, Latin America, and the United States.

Course Objectives

1. Help students analyze globalization, racial capitalism, neoliberalism, development, and resistance from a variety of theoretical perspectives in sociology and related disciplines such as anthropology, geography, and political science.
2. Introduce students to major theoretical currents in critical globalization studies, including relevant paradigms, concepts, and themes.

3. Familiarize students with diverse experiences of globalization and resistance in Africa, Asia, The Caribbean, Latin America, and North America.
4. Highlight the intersections among various struggles related to land, labor, class, gender, race, human rights, indigenous cultures, and the environment.
5. Prepare students for qualifying exams and subsequent dissertation research in the globalization concentration, and in the subfield of critical globalization studies.
6. Train students for future undergraduate teaching assignments in the areas of globalization, capitalism and development studies.

Class Format

Seminar - collaborative discussion, requiring active participation from everyone

Several weeks will be “Asynchronous” and we will not meet on Zoom at those times. On those weeks you will be required to complete remote work and submit Keyword Assignments.

Required Texts

1. CLR James, Black Jacobins: Toussaint L’Ouverture and the San Domingo Revolution (Vintage; 2nd ed. edition, 1989)
2. Ching Kwan Lee, Against the Law: Labor Protests in China's Rustbelt and Sunbelt (U. of California Press, 2007)
3. Hannah Appel, The Licit Life of Capitalism: US Oil in Equatorial Guinea (Duke 2019)
4. Karen Ho, Liquidated: An Ethnography of Wall Street (Duke University Press, 2009)
5. Stuart Schrader, Badges Without Borders: How Global Counterinsurgency Transformed American Policing (UC Press: 2020)
6. Carwil Bjork-James, Sovereign Street: Making Revolution in Urban Bolivia (U. Arizona Press 2020)
7. Ruth Wilson Gilmore, Golden Gulag: Prisons, Surplus, Crisis and Opposition in Globalizing California (UC Press 2007)
8. Jeffrey S. Juris, Networking Futures: Movements against Corporate Globalization (Duke U. Press, 2008)
9. Millie Thayer, Making Transnational Feminism (Routledge, 2010)

Additional Readings will be posted on Canvas.

Expectations and Grades

Participation (20%): The course will be run as a collaborative seminar. Each week, students will come to class prepared to discuss the readings. Reading load: The reading load is heavy, but students are encouraged to strategically skim where necessary. In addition, the instructor will send out periodic reading tips to reduce and/or help students prioritize readings. As such, the syllabus will be subject to minor changes during the semester.

Reading Response (30%): Each week, students must submit a roughly 600-1000 words reading response. I am asking for a specific format for these responses, so please include:

- a) a few sentence summary of the argument(s) being made in each book, article, and stand-alone chapter
- b) another few sentences (or so) explaining what makes the argument novel, important, and/or a contribution to the study of globalization, capitalism and development. Please pay attention whether the piece's novelty comes from the methods used, the question asked, the answers reached, or the analytic framework utilized.
- c) a brief comparison of how this piece differs from /builds on/ aligns with the other piece(s) read for the week.
- d) And then, taking all of the pieces read for this week and identify the questions, thoughts, ideas, come to mind when you read all of the pieces together. This is the response, while the other pieces are the summary.
- e) RESPONSES DUE: Every Monday, at 10pm

Keyword Assignments (Asynchronous) (20%): During several weeks of the semester we will not meet synchronously. During those class times you will be expected to complete asynchronous work in the form of Keyword Assignments. Directions: Please compile a list of 4 to 6 key words, concepts, or terms from the week's reading. Students must submit a roughly 800-1000 words (total) defining these key words and concepts. You must reference particular passages and quotes from the text (though avoid overly-lengthy block quotes). Secondly, in a few paragraphs please explain the importance or significance of each keyword or concept in relation to the topic of the week and to the broader themes the class in general. Keyword Assignments are due by 10pm on the day of an Asynchronous class.

Final Papers (30%): For the final paper, please write a 12-15-page (double spaced) analytic response to one (or two – but not more) sections of the course syllabus. Draw from both the required and recommended readings and bring in additional pieces that you think are relevant to the conversation. I want you make an argument and intervention into this body of work, identifying (1) unanswered questions, (2) whether these questions are outdated, (3) ways that the literature may or may not be relevant to a different context, (4) alternative methods that may be more useful, etc.

If you are working on a field statement or publishable paper related to the course themes and you would find it more useful to do something else for your final paper, please discuss it with me early on in the semester.

Final papers due on Wednesday, December 15, at 5pm.
